Notes

Probate records are records created by a court after a person's death that relate to the distribution of his or her estate. If the person left a will (i.e. testate), then the purpose of the probate process was to document its validity and see that it was carried out by the executor named in the will. In cases where a person did not leave a will (i.e. intestate), then probate was used to appoint an administrator or administratrix to determine the distribution of assets according to the laws of the jurisdiction.

Probate records may include any or all of the following documents: wills; estate inventories, or lists of assets; appointments of executors or administrators; administrations, or documentation of the distribution of assets; petitions for guardianship of minor children; lists of heirs; lists of creditors or accounts of debts; and other records considered to be important to the settlement of an estate.
